How to Design and Plan Your Dream Greenhouse Or Shed

A greenhouse is a fantastic way to grow your plants and vegetables. It provides the right conditions for photosynthesis, the process whereby plants use sunlight to make food in their leaves.

Greenhouses are great for growing plants in the winter and can be used for many different types of horticulture. However, it is essential to remember that the plastic or glass that makes up most of a greenhouse can trap too much heat during the day.

Size

Greenhouses or sheds are great ways to claim a unique space on your property. It could be a place to work out, enjoy the peace or even serve as an office.

Regardless of its use, you want to ensure it's the right size for your needs. This means considering the space you need to grow and cultivate your plants and room for storage or furniture.

Generally, a greenhouse should be at least 6ft wide to allow enough room for the plants and staging on both sides; 8ft is better. A longer greenhouse will also provide more window space for solar gain, which is essential to getting your plants the perfect environment.

Lighting

Whether you're designing a greenhouse or shed for your backyard, you must have a few essential lighting fixtures and accessories. The proper lighting can make gardening more accessible, reduce energy consumption and help you harvest the best fruits and vegetables.

Consider the light you need when choosing your greenhouse or shed lighting fixtures. Knowing the lux or lumens required is an essential first step, and then you can calculate how many bulbs are needed to illuminate your space.

LEDs are a popular choice for greenhouse lighting, as they offer bright and efficient solutions that a simple switch can control. However, they can produce deep shadows, which can be a distraction when working in close quarters. Use LEDs with directional light to minimize this effect.

Plants

Whether you plan to grow fruits and vegetables or add a touch of elegance to your home, the right plants make all the difference. You'll also need greenhouse accessories like doors and vents to help control the temperature inside and make the growing process more efficient.

A greenhouse is a workplace, so benches and shelves are necessary. They allow you to keep tools and small equipment within easy reach without cluttering the space.

For added convenience, you can install a watering system. This programmable irrigation system helps you save time and water by delivering the exact amount of water your plants need when they need it.

Furniture

A well-designed greenhouse or shed can enhance your gardening experience in several ways. It can help protect delicate plants from the elements and keep your favorite fruit and vegetables alive and healthy.

To be effective, it needs to have a robust and sturdy structure, which requires solid framing. Its framing material might be a wood, metal pipe, or plastic piping.

You also need to choose a roof covering for your greenhouse or shed, especially if you live in an area with frequent snowfall. The best roofing material will have a low thermal conductivity, a high light-transmitting factor, and is aesthetically pleasing. Other factors to consider include roof slope, freeboard, and gutters. Lastly, consider ventilation options like hinged roof vents and side vents.

Accessories

Accessories are a great way to complete the design and plan of your dream greenhouse or shed. These accessories can be anything from plant tables and potting benches to shade cloths for the roof.

One of the most prevalent greenhouse accessories is a plant table optimized for airflow. It's a convenient gardening tool and can store plants you're not growing.

Another popular greenhouse accessory is a potting bench built for convenience and storage. It's a perfect solution for any gardener who loves to grow food.

Gardens Add Life and Equity to Your Home

When it comes to investing in a new home, the one word you always want to keep in mind is equity. The more equity you build up in your home the more valuable it will be should you decide to sell one day.

Or, part of your retirement plan might include applying for reverse mortgage. If you're 62 or older, you can tap into all that equity you've been growing by paying your monthly mortgage on time. If approved, you can receive your proceeds in one lump sum payment or equal monthly disbursements.

To find out more on how a reverse mortgage works just click on this link: <https://reverse.mortgage/how-does-it-work>.

But if you're still a decade or two away from retirement and you're looking for new and unique, if not healthy, ways to increase the value of your home, go no further than your own backyard. Studies have shown that growing a garden is a beneficial and vibrant way to add equity to your home. It also provides you with a healthy lifestyle.

According to a recent article by Gardeningetc.com, gardens not only make your home more appealing to potential buyers, it virtually guarantees they will be give you a nicer offer for it. During the recent pandemic, gardens proved to be an invaluable way to spend your home lockdown time while building something that was both creative, beautiful, and in the case of a vegetable garden, nutritious.

Presently, the people who took the time and effort to grow a garden during the pandemic are now reaping the financial rewards when it comes time to sell their home.

Garden Growth Study

A new study conducted by AA has discovered that growing a garden on a portion of your property will potentially increase its value by an average of 5 percent. This proves a substantial financial add-on to already increasing home values in the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic. The study was said to examine properties with and without gardens in more than 30 cities and towns where gardens seem to be valued the most.

Also, the study examined three-bedroom homes without gardens and compared them to homes with gardens, then looked at what the sellers were charging for each. Sellers that contained gardens and stunning landscaping on their property were getting upwards of seven to 15 percent more per offer depending upon where the property was located.

But In the Big City

Says Gardeningetc.com, properties located in the big city (in this case, London), went for less money than properties without gardens. This came as a surprise to those in charge of the study since it would seem those living and working in a largely urban environment would appreciate a garden, no matter how humble.

However, the study indicated that because of the spike in price for newly constructed penthouses and flats, the price add-on for a garden became inconsequential. In fact, London ranked as the city where a garden added the least amount of money to new housing for sale.

Why People Love Their Gardens

Despite the extra value a garden can give your home, it's vital to know why homeowners with green thumbs love their gardens so much. A recent survey found that more than 50 percent of people who possess gardens on their property spent a great deal of time maintaining them during the pandemic lockdowns. The information varies from town to town, but, gardening is good for the body and good for the soul.

It also helps that when making their gardens better, bigger, and more productive, homeowners fully realize they are investing in their property. They are increasing its value upwards of 15 percent in some cases.

While urban prices don't increase all that much due to a garden, people who lived with gardens previously are willing to shell out extra money for a small garden in the city. For them, gardening is as much a hobby as it is a healthy way of life.

Your First Garden

Gardeningetc.com states that if you're planning your first garden, it helps to contact a designer who will plan your new backyard and who also work directly with a contractor who can provide the initial work. Gardens aren't just about growing things. They are all about recreating your backyard space, including new landscaping. Of course, you can always DIY the project also.

But if you go with professionals to plan and build your first garden, you can expect to pay around $10,000. But you will more than make up for this fee when it comes time to sell your home, or when you apply for a reverse mortgage come retirement age.

Ways To Have Sustainable Meat Without Slaughtering Animals

There are several ways to eat sustainable meat without killing an animal. For example, you can buy cultivated meat, support animal-friendly farmers, buy in bulk, and buy plant-based or fermented substitutes. In addition, you can reduce your carbon footprint by avoiding slaughterhouses and other animal-related activities.

In a world where sustainability is becoming increasingly essential, conscientious consumers are seeking ways to enjoy meat without sacrificing their ethical principles. One effective approach lies in choosing meats from brands committed to humane and sustainable practices. For instance, selecting the best liverwurst from a trusted brand ensures not only a delicious meal but also peace of mind, knowing that it comes from a source dedicated to responsible farming practices. By making thoughtful choices in their meat purchases, consumers can play a significant role in promoting sustainability within the food industry.

Supporting Farmers Who Treat Their Animals Well

If you care about animals, it's important to support farmers who treat their animals well. This includes making your purchase decisions based on the welfare of the animals. Like Paul Shapiro, you can also act politically and fight efforts that benefit factory farms. You can also make an impact by traveling to countries that support farmers who treat their animals well. When you travel, avoid eating local cuisine that includes animal cruelty. For example, do not eat live fish or "bushmeat." You can also sign up for action alerts.

Animal welfare has become increasingly important. Approximately 99% of animals raised in the U.S. are raised in factory farms, where workers are exposed to hazardous conditions and often have to sacrifice their health to make profits. As a result, the animal welfare issue is a growing concern among consumers, and consumers must take action to help farmers improve the lives of the animals.

Buying Plant-based Substitutes

Buying plant-based or fermented alternatives to meat can be a sustainable way to consume meat without slaughtering animals. These alternatives have a low environmental impact but may be more expensive. In addition, they may have a limited sensory appeal and are not as popular among consumers as animal-based alternatives. This may be due to a lack of consumer education, food neophobia, or perceived inferior quality. Nevertheless, the ability to substitute meat for meat-based alternatives depends on consumer recognition of the substitute. The substitute should be similar in shape and form to meat. It should also be prepared like the meat, which consumers are used to.

The production process of plant-based or fermented meat substitutes is highly varied, and a range of textures is available. Some have undesirable off-flavors, such as astringent or bitter flavor. However, these compounds may be removed via germination or heat treatment. In addition, they might contain traces of phytochemicals, which may have anticancer properties.

Buying Cultivated Meat

You can try cultivated meat if you are looking for sustainable meat without slaughtering animals. This product is produced by using immature cells. After maturing for two to eight weeks, the cells are harvested, processed, and packaged to make various products. Cultivated meat has some advantages over conventional animal agriculture. For one, it uses less land, emits fewer greenhouse gases, and reduces agricultural

pollution and eutrophication. It is also free of antibiotics and other chemicals, which means less contamination and fewer foodborne illnesses. However, some people worry that cultivated meat will reduce competition in the world protein market. They fear that it will result in a greater concentration of power in the hands of a small group of firms.

Buying In Bulk

Buying bulk sustainable meat without slaughter is possible and can effectively minimize your grocery bill. However, the meat industry produces a lot of waste during the slaughtering process, including bones, tendons, skin, contents of the gastrointestinal tract, and blood. This waste varies depending on the animal species.
